Special Guest: Governor Laura Kelly Conversation Highlights

- KAAAC legislative priorities play a critical role in driving the conversations and public policies to make Kansas a more equitable place for all.
- The last year has helped to shine a light on inequality embedded in our society. Unique barriers to employment, education opportunities, healthcare, housing, and other essential services and how profoundly they impact our Black and Brown communities.
- COVID-19 pandemic has disproportionately affected communities of color. Black and Brown Kansans are more likely to be infected by the virus and become seriously ill and succumb to its harmful effects. Barriers in accessing quality childcare and high-speed internet put our communities of color at a distinct disadvantage when school buildings were closed to mitigate the spread of the virus through federal funding provided to our state by the CARES ACT.
- The administration...
  - Has worked to strengthen our social safety net and increase Black Kansans' access to critical support systems.
  - Expanded unemployment insurance benefits
  - Implemented programs to support low-wage and essential workers.
  - Improved access to child care.

While continued support from our federal partners is essential, my administration will not stop looking for ways to make our government work better for Kansans who have been disproportionately impacted by this health crisis.

- Vaccine distribution plan...
  - The administration will continue to prioritize those who are high risk to keep Kansans in every community healthy.
- Get our kids back to school
- Protect our small businesses
- Convened a diverse group of stakeholders to address the systemic inequalities in our state, the Commission on Racial Equity and Justice...
  - Developing and recommending actions the administration can take to address racism in our state.
  - So far the group is primarily focused on law enforcement relations.
  - Commission has held dozens of listening sessions ranging in topics from juvenile justice, mental health, substance use, and other concerns.

- Commission's first report contained initial steps we can take to increase racial equity and justice in Kansas
- Detailed steps outlined in this report covered everything from enhanced anti-bias training curriculum for law enforcement trainees, increasing diversity in law enforcement ranks, state government, and expanding public defender offices.
- Committed to doing all I can to drive these policy initiatives
- Committed to improving the quality of life for African American communities.
- The administration has prioritized rebuilding our state's foundation. Reinvesting in four core government services
  - Education
  - Healthcare
  - Infrastructure
  - Economic Development
- Ensuring Quality Education For All
- Capital investments: supporting programs that provide resources to assist Black and Brown business owners like the office of minority and women business development houses in the Kansas Department of Commerce
- Expanding access to health care to the 150,000 Kansans who currently fall into the coverage gap.
